

I'm encouraged to see that despite the pandemic, and despite the difficulties and layers added by the adjustments we've needed to make, that our SMSU community is still reaching out to us for help and that we're still providing it.

Ongoing projects planned for 2021-2022 include many of the items that were in this spot last year and were sidelined by the pandemic:

- A series of instructional videos to be developed by librarians around common procedures and problems using databases;
- Continuing to develop online training for student workers (though we are not planning on employing any Peer Research Assistants this upcoming academic year, at least not at the time of submitting this report);
- Looking for additional ways/places we can reach our students studying from a distance, both for those enrolled in all-online programs, or those who are following Covid quarantining protocols.

I am trying to maintain a stance of flexibility and openness for the coming year—and I can honestly say that at this time I'm looking forward to it.
